

Digital Scholarship Initiatives Spring 2019

All events runs from 11:30am-12:30pm in LIB 2264A or 272

Workshop Series (Registration recommended)

- Scholarly Publishing, Part 1: Open Access Monday, February 18

This session will provide an overview of the scholarly publishing model with an emphasis on its evolution to the open access movement. Discussion will emphasize the pros and cons of the open access movement as it pertains to authors of scholarly content. A hands-on activity will help participants discern between the different types of publisher agreements available to authors, and will give tips as to selecting preferable conditions for publication.

Audience: Most interesting for graduate students, early-career faculty, and those interested in scholarly publishing.

- Scholarly Publishing, Part 2: Scholarly Writing Wednesday, February 27

Building on the concepts introduced in Part 1, the Part 2 session will help graduate students and early-career faculty produce an individualized, multistep action plan for turning one's research into a submitted article. Participants will review library resources they can consult in locating possible journals for publication. The session will highlight organizational strategies for productive writing, and concepts such as author identifiers and author metrics data will be discussed.

Audience: Same as Part 1, graduate students, early-career faculty, and those interested in publishing

- Exploring Wikipedia Tuesday, April 2

Wikipedia, the online encyclopedia is part of the fabric of our digital life. It is used worldwide, by millions of people daily. Join this workshop to learn more about it, as well as, how to use your knowledge and research skills to make it better. The instructor will share what she learned after taking a 9 week Wikipedia course, as well as, her experience working with a faculty member on a Wikipedia classroom assignment.

Audience: This workshop is for anyone who wants to add to their knowledge of Wikipedia.

More Info at <http://dsi.mtsu.edu/spring2019>

dsi.mtsu.edu

